

Anyway, a billion certs + trainings later (including AA2013) <Sean> landed a job with <redacted>... and they were still looking for more engineers. He sent an Email to <redacted> (for me to send my resume) and I quickly got an interview. It went very well... and I <laid> it down, citing my experience + exceptional skills that would help them succeed. At the end of the interview... <redacted> asked me when I could start! It was unreal. I still felt some apprehension... As if I couldn't have done this alone. But thanks to <Sean>, I had an opportunity... And I nailed that interview. Almost two months later, we're taking care of business <redacted>. My first engineering job! (Making $, too. Although I love my job/what we do for more than that). At a staff meeting (USSRC), the Crew Trainers freaked when they announced my departure. <Carlos> knew it was coming, and <redacted> about freaked, too. I didn't realize how "critical" I had become... But I was satisfied. And it's someone else's turn. <redacted> Gave <Carlos> + <Sean> a $100 gift card to The Melting Pot (because every couple should go once) and <redacted> $100 to Target.